

What to eat to get rid of Gout

As a gout victim you need to watch what you eat to get rid of gout. Gout and diet tend to be associated. Here, you will discover meals you are able to eat to get rid of gout. And you will also get to know which foods to avoid to help eliminate your gout.

CAUSES of GOUT

Gout is actually the result of uric acid crystals in your joints and tissue around your joints. These types of crystals form when you have high uric acid in your blood.

Uric acid will be produced by the metabolization of 'purines' in your body cells and foods. Purines are chemical compounds that help produce your energy and protein needs among other things good to you.

- Note that purines exist in our foods at different concentrations depending on the food type.
- As a rule of thumb, high protein foods and foods high in fat contain the highest levels of purines.

FOODS NOT to EAT to GET RID of GOUT

So, foods to avoid to get rid of gout are, generally speaking, fatty steak, organ beef, online game, fish, shellfish and legumes, plus, yeast and alcohol (especially beer). But even within these there are varying purine levels...

You should definitely avoid all fatty red meat, venison, pork, burgers, bacon, and so forth., and, organ meat such as liver, heart and also kidneys, etc. Although it has been suggested that a maximum of 6 oz of lean meat could be consumed daily.

- All shellfish and fish like mackerel, herring, sardines, anchovies and roe, must also be avoided.
- But other fish like tuna can be taken in small quantities (6 ounces daily) because of omega3 benefits.
- Poultry such as duck, turkey and goose are usually an absolute no-no.
- But 6 ounces of chicken daily should be fine.
- Note: Try to different poultry, lean meat and allowed fish, so you never have more than 6 ounces total daily.

Yeast extracts together with brewer's and baker's yeasts are also to be avoided.
